

Suki and Eco Eddy: Guardians of Green!

~ A magical tale of teamwork, nature, and saving the Earth ~

It was Earth Week at Sunbeam School Lahartara, and Sustainability Suki was excited! She had prepared posters, games, and a song about saving the Earth. But she still felt like something was missing.

That's when it happened.

As Suki was planting seeds in the school garden, a strange glow surrounded one tiny sapling. The leaves shimmered, the soil trembled a little—and out popped a friendly, smiling creature made of bark, vines, and glowing green eyes.

"Hi there! I'm Eco Eddy," he chirped. "I heard your call. I'm your new sidekick!"

Suki gasped in joy. "A living plant? You can talk?"

"Of course!" laughed Eco Eddy. "And I've got powers to help you protect nature. I can speed up plant growth, sense pollution, heal greenery, and even recycle discarded waste into useful things!"

Suki clapped her hands. "You're just what I needed!"

Their first mission came quickly. The school's back garden was full of dry, droopy plants, and trash was lying around—plastic wrappers, broken crayons, even a cracked toy bucket.

Eco Eddy rolled up his leafy sleeves (well, sort of). "Let's go!"

He zipped through the garden, whispering to every plant. Instantly, they perked up—fresh, green, and blooming. "I gave them a little boost," he grinned.

Then, he sniffed the air and pointed. "There's plastic hidden under the soil. It's hurting the roots!"

Suki and Eco Eddy carefully removed the trash. Eddy then touched the discarded toy bucket. "Watch this!"

The bucket glowed and transformed into a colorful watering can.

Suki's eyes widened. "You really can recycle!"

Excited, they started a campaign in school called "Team Green". Suki made charts about pollution and waste. Eco Eddy added fun by making little recycled toys and leaf badges for every student who joined their mission.

During lunch, if someone dropped trash, Eddy's vines would gently hand it back. He would say in a sing-song voice, "Waste belongs in the right place!"

Children laughed, learned, and started using the bins correctly. Soon, the garden wasn't the only green space—eco-awareness had sprouted in everyone's hearts.

But one day, dark smoke filled the sky from a nearby garbage fire.

Eddy's leaves drooped. "That's dangerous!"

Suki nodded. "Let's act fast."

Together, they informed the teachers, and a school emergency team was formed. Eddy sensed the direction of the smoke, and the children used cloth masks and moved to the indoor garden area.

Once safe, Eddy helped purify the air by growing fast-leafing plants. The school thanked them with a big round of applause.

Later that day, Suki looked at Eco Eddy. "You're more than a sidekick. You're a superhero."

Eco Eddy smiled, a flower blooming on his head. "Together, we're unbeatable."

And from that day on, whenever a child needed a reminder to protect the Earth, a soft breeze would carry a whisper through the leaves—

"Think green, act clean!"
