

Good morning. There was a strange noise: “Chirp-chirp,” “Woof-woof,” “Moooo.” There were animals everywhere in Suki’s house. Suki cried, “There are animals everywhere, and they always make my house so messy!” She ran around the house to chase the animals out and tripped over about 52 bunches of flowers and 12 trees. After two hours of chasing, she slammed the door and jumped back into her bed. She shouted, “There are too many animals to care for! This isn’t a house, this is a zoo!”

Then she quickly realised it was just a dream, she felt strange and suddenly opened her eyes. She was in a tent, sweating all over her body. Her sidekick, Susi, was beside her and asked, “Good morning. Did you sleep well?” Suki looked around. She was in a forest with a peaceful environment. Feeling a bit dizzy, she said quietly, “Yeah, but I had a horrible dream!” She got up slowly and ate a sandwich for breakfast.

After a few minutes, she stood up, recalling her scary dream. She walked through the forest, with her sidekick following behind her. After a short walk, she suddenly had an idea and said, “Oh! I think I could build an animal and plant center where animals and plants can live together and make a great green environment. I can also build a recycling park to recycle plastic bags and trash in the forest!” She jumped up and told this fantastic idea to her sidekick. Susi said, “Suki, what a brilliant idea!”

After a few days in the forest, Suki’s fantastic idea became reality. They had built two big parks in the center of the forest. There were water animals, plants, trees, recycling machines, plastic, and trash. Everything was fantastic.

One morning, when Suki and Susi woke up, they both saw a mess everywhere, and everything was in trouble. Many trees had fallen down, plants were all over the ground, plastic bags and trash were scattered, and the park was ruined. The animals in the park had disappeared, and there were huge footprints everywhere.

“What a mess!” screamed Susi. “No one can destroy so many things in one night, so I suppose a huge dragon did this. Look at those footprints.”

“Yeah, I see,” Suki said, pointing to the huge footprints. “It’s time to work.”

They changed clothes, put on helmets, boots, and wings, and flew along the trail of footprints. They stopped in front of a lake where the footprints disappeared. Suddenly, they saw a ‘Plary’ (a plant fairy) holding two boxes. The Plary said, “Hi Suki, do you want a chest of gold or a tip on where the evil dragon went?”

Suki said, “Hi, I don’t know who you are, but I’d like the tip, please!” The Plary smiled, gave her the second box, and disappeared. Suki opened the box and found a little plant with some bags on its branches. She opened a bag and saw the tip: ‘No water, no field, but the little street with plants and shine!’

Suki and her sidekick read it again and again. “I know! It’s the path between those trees,” she said, pointing between two trees. “The street is shiny because there is a crystal volcano, and the crystals are everywhere and because of the hot lava, there isn't any water. The street is wiggly and small so there isn't a field!" They ran and ran. Finally, they saw a big dragon, and he was eating all the trees.

"Hey! Stop it!" Susi shouted. The dragon turned around and roared, "ROAR!"

Suki flew up to the dragon, looked him straight in the eye, and said, "I think you shouldn't do that. If you keep eating the trees, the environment will get worse, causing global warming. It will affect all the people in the town!"

The dragon stopped roaring and looked scared. Suki and Susi brought the dragon to the center of the forest. The dragon looked around and said, "I'm so sorry. I was wrong," lowering his head. Then Suki said, "Don't worry. We just want to teach you about the environment, but we think you shouldn't eat too many trees."

One week later, in the morning, Suki woke up and said, "Good morning, I think we taught the dragon about the environment. That was a great idea, and we did it." "Yeah," said Susi. Then a strange noise began: "Chirp-chirp," "Woof-woof," "Mooooo..." "ROAR."

"Oh, I think we forgot to feed the animals yesterday!" said Suki, and they both laughed together.

Written By Gioia