

Teamwork Tama and the Big Box Day

Teamwork Tama isn't tall, but he wears the same blue bandana every single day, no matter if it's windy, rainy, or even Tuesday. He says it helps his "teamwork brain," but mostly, it just makes his hair stick up funny. His assistant is Pico. Pico is a robot, but he's not scary or big but just kind of small, like a lunchbox with legs. He beeps a lot and has a little screen face that shows his mood, which is mostly happy.

Together, they work at the Fix-It-All Shop in Round Square. It's a place where people bring broken things, and Tama and Pico try to fix them. One time, someone brought in a hat they had accidentally sat on and said, "Fix this hat; it used to have good vibes."

One day, Tama and Pico were working in the shop when they noticed a huge box sitting outside. It was massive which was even bigger than a dog. Tama said, "That smells like a project." Pico beeped, and Tama added, "That's his excited beep."

They dragged the box inside. It made a clunky noise, like it had robot bones in it. When they opened it, they were shocked. There were so many parts: wood, metal, wheels, buttons, wires, a spring, and even a yellow rubber duck for some reason. Tama looked at the paper that came with it, but it was mostly smudged. He said, "We can guess!"

They started building. Pico got the tools, and Tama held things. Then, Tama got juice, and Pico hammered things. They switched tasks about eight times. They built it wrong twice. Once, it looked like a spaceship but upside down. Another time, the wheel was on the roof. Pico got his foot stuck in glue and beeped repeatedly, "Beep beep beep beep!" Tama laughed and said, "That's a teamwork accident."

Finally, after hours of work, crumbs, juice breaks, and more glue, they finished it. It was a CART! And it had a horn that went quack when you pressed the duck. Then, the mayor showed up and said, "OH! You found the box! Those were the parts for our city delivery cart. We forgot to include a note."

Tama grinned and said, "Pico and I added a little extra duck flair." The mayor smiled and replied, "Perfect. That's exactly what Round Square is all about." The next day, the cart was already zooming around, delivering snacks, letters, and even warm socks (they fell out once, but it didn't matter). The people of Round Square were laughing and cheering as they got their deliveries.

Tama and Pico watched from the Fix-It-All window. Tama smiled and said, "See, Pico? That's what teamwork can do. We didn't just fix a cart; we made something special." Pico beeped twice, which meant, "Yep, we sure did."

As they watched the cart continue its rounds, both Tama and Pico knew that no matter how big or small the project, as long as they worked together, they could accomplish anything. Teamwork, after all, was the best part of any adventure.

GEMS New Millennium School, Dubai

by Eisa Umair (13 years)